

Fall 2020 COVID-19 Quick Reference Guide for Home Sharing Providers

As we enter the fall season, your coordinating agency will work with you to provide the pandemic help you need. If you work directly with CLBC, you will receive this support from your Liaison Analyst.

Here are the simple steps home sharing providers should take if you are worried that you or your supported individual might have COVID-19:

If you or your supported individual has symptoms, stay home and call 8-1-1 to assess whether you need to isolate and get a test.

If you or your supported individual test positive for COVID-19, your local health officials will give you direction. If symptoms are not serious, you may be asked to isolate together just as a family unit would be asked to do while you recover.

Alert your home sharing coordinator (or if directly contracted, your CLBC analyst). They will work with you to help you follow health guidance and take the right steps to protect yourself and the individual you support.

As we face this fall season, remember that you are not alone. Should you have a COVID incident, your agency will be in daily contact to provide help and monitor the situation. If directly contracted, your Liaison Analyst will be providing support.

We have had very few cases so far in our sector, and most have only experienced moderate symptoms and been able to recover at home. In the unlikely event that a home sharing provider is unable to provide care, your agency and CLBC will mobilize resources to provide the care that is required.
